Scene 1

NGARRINDJERI ANCESTRAL STORY

Ngarrindjeri dreaming story, Illustrated by Nellie Rankine and animated by Luku Kukukuku. The Pondi (Murray Cod) is chased by Ngurunderi. Pondi swims away from Ngurunderi, carving out the path of the Murray River as he escapes. When Ngurunderi threw his spear after Pondi, he missed... and the spear became Long Island (Lentiel), an island close to Murray Bridge town.

RAIN

Poetry by local artist Yuan Yang, animated by Danica Wells-Heitmann and Cindi Drennan. The ripples image celebrates the 2010 Ripples year (Murray Bridge SA is the Regional Centre of Culture in 2010) and represents community knowledge about the essence and necessity of water for the life of the river and the town.

Juan's poem:

Raining

Finally you are coming, wrapping inside
winds, both of you dancing all your way, attentively hugging this dry anxious land.
You gently and softly kissing the leaves, the flowers, the plants....

I could hear your twittering to them:
“ here i am, here i am,....”

the trees, the plants, the flowers soaking
them self into you,
stretching relaxed in your twittering.

Scene 3

WE REMEMBER SWIMMING IN THE RIVER

Local elders remember swimming in the river before the river levels dropped. Children were connected to the river as a place to play, catch fish, swim. The children run and splash, the splashes become paisley. Animated by Danica Wells-Heitmann, Luku Kukuku and Cindi Drennan.

Scene 4

CAPTAIN PROUD AND THE LIVING SPIRIT OF THE RIVER

Depicting the historical period where boats used the river as a thoroughfare to travel and transport goods, and the deep love that the boat people have for the river. Animated by Danica Wells-Heitmann, and Cindi Drennan. Words by Juan Yang: "It must be fate that made us met" from her poem "Accept and Respect".

Scene 5

OUR RIVER IS ENTWINED BY RED TAPE

The ribbon is an analogy for the river, and for the relationship of love and romance. The entwining ribbons represents love between people, the history of humans connecting to the river, and to the red tape that people describe as entwining the river. Many local people said that they felt that most Australians did not understand or know the state of the Murray River, and that bureaucracy (red tape) was not helping to save the River.

Scene 6

OUR MEMORIES OF THE DAYS GONE BY

Thanks to the support of the State Library of SA we were able to include historic photographs of the town of Murray Bridge, and the river in flood. These photos and the text contributed by the residents of Murray Bridge gave us insights into the river in the early days, when it flooded unpredictably. A giant grandfather clock winds backwards as images are revealed upon the walls of the Town Hall. Animated by Cindi Drennan.

Scene 7

THE FIRST BRIDGE CROSSING

The first train bridge is sketched onto the building by an artist's hand. The arched windows of the building become the pillars of the Murray Bridge, and a steam train crosses. Animated by Cindi Drennan.

Scene 8

ACCEPT AND RESPECT

Poetry by Juan Yang, describes the pain of a broken relationship. Bricks fall to reveal two stone hearts. A ribbon connects the two hearts as the metaphor of hope and of healing. Animated by Guy Jamieson and Cindi Drennan.

Accept and Respect

Must be fate made us met
I got the message from your eyes
I sense the cold and detached from your gesture

Can not blame you
if i am in your shoes
I would do the same

close your heart
because I am a looking different to you
But I will leave my heart open that you could step in any time
If you feel to.

Isolating only make the gap wider we need a chance to show each other
That we are not allies to each other

wrap off the sympathize wrap off the deign
Let's be objectivity
Give our hands to each other
Then the hearts will open

Next our eyes will shine with
accept and respect

Scene 9

EVERYONE WANTS THEIR SHARE

Based on local stories and comments, that as industries upstream take from the river, there is less left for the natural cycles of the living river downstream, and that this is killing the mouth of the Murray. One comment was: no-one screams for the river, but when the taps stop flowing, they will all shout. Once again, red ribbon represents the red tape. Pipes, taps and outflows are mapped to the shape of the building, and the ribbon crossing stops the wasteful flow of water. Animated by Danica Wells-Heitmann and Cindi Drennan

Scene 10

CUTTING THE RIBBON

Representing cutting of the ribbon for the opening of the new cultural precinct, and also a visual play on cutting the red tape. The theatre curtains open to reveal a playful and colourful vision of butterflies, fountains and paisley, suggesting there is hope for the future with vision and commitment. Composited by Cindi Drennan
